Two Column Layout

Alpha is the first paragraph of the left column. It is long enough to wrap onto several lines so that the reconstruction has to join lines inside a narrow column, and it ends with a full stop.

Bravo follows in the same column. Columns are narrow, so even a modest paragraph such as this one needs three or four lines of text before it is finished.

Charlie is the third paragraph. It is deliberately long so that it starts at the bottom of the left column and continues at the top of the right column, which is the interesting case: the importer must notice that the two halves belong together and must not insert a paragraph break at the column boundary, however the lines happen to fall on the page.

Delta begins in the right column after the continued paragraph. It is short.

Echo is the last paragraph of the page and it also sits in the right column, below Delta, with a few lines of its own to make sure the ordering is really top to bottom.